EXOTIC BELLE -- "Whiskey Johnnie" (that's her real name) Frisbie, half-native daughter of the legendary South Seas author, Robert Dean Frisbie, performs in an Hawaiian night club for opening scenes in the third episode of "High Adventure with Lowell Thomas" (in color, CBS-TV, Monday, January 19, 10:00-11:00 p.m., EST). Thomas stopped off to interview "Whiskey Johnnie" about the little, unknown island of Puka Puka, or Danger Island, in the South Seas, where she was born and which is the backdrop for the next "High Adventure with Lowell Thomas" show. The island, virtually cut off from civilization for centuries because its dangerous reef barred all vessels, became the headquarters of a group of scientists from the U.S., transported there by the U.S. Navy to gather valuable knowledge about the sun during the October 12th eclipse. Six Nike-Asp rockets launched 150 miles into space were used in the observations. Titled "Danger Island," the Thomas one-hour film in color will highlight this and other dramatic events on the island during the IGY project. "High Adventure with Lowell Thomas" is sponsored by the United Motors System and Delco-Remy Division of General Motors.
